

10 Best Practices for

STELLAR CONTENT IDEAS FOR YOUR B2B ASSET LIBRARY

That Every B2B Marketer
Should Know and Use

www.INFUSEmedia.com

Content marketing is at the heart of B2B marketing efforts in recent years, and for good reasons. It requires only a third of a traditional marketing budget, while providing businesses with three times more leads.

That's why 93 percent of B2B marketers across the globe employ content marketing to deliver their brand messages. By offering useful and engaging content, these marketers are better equipped to create meaningful relationships with buyers, instead of just pushing them a sale.

Timely and high-quality content is a great way to build trust in your company. Thoughtful content production demonstrates your dedication to truly help people, while also building a brand image of reliability and expertise.

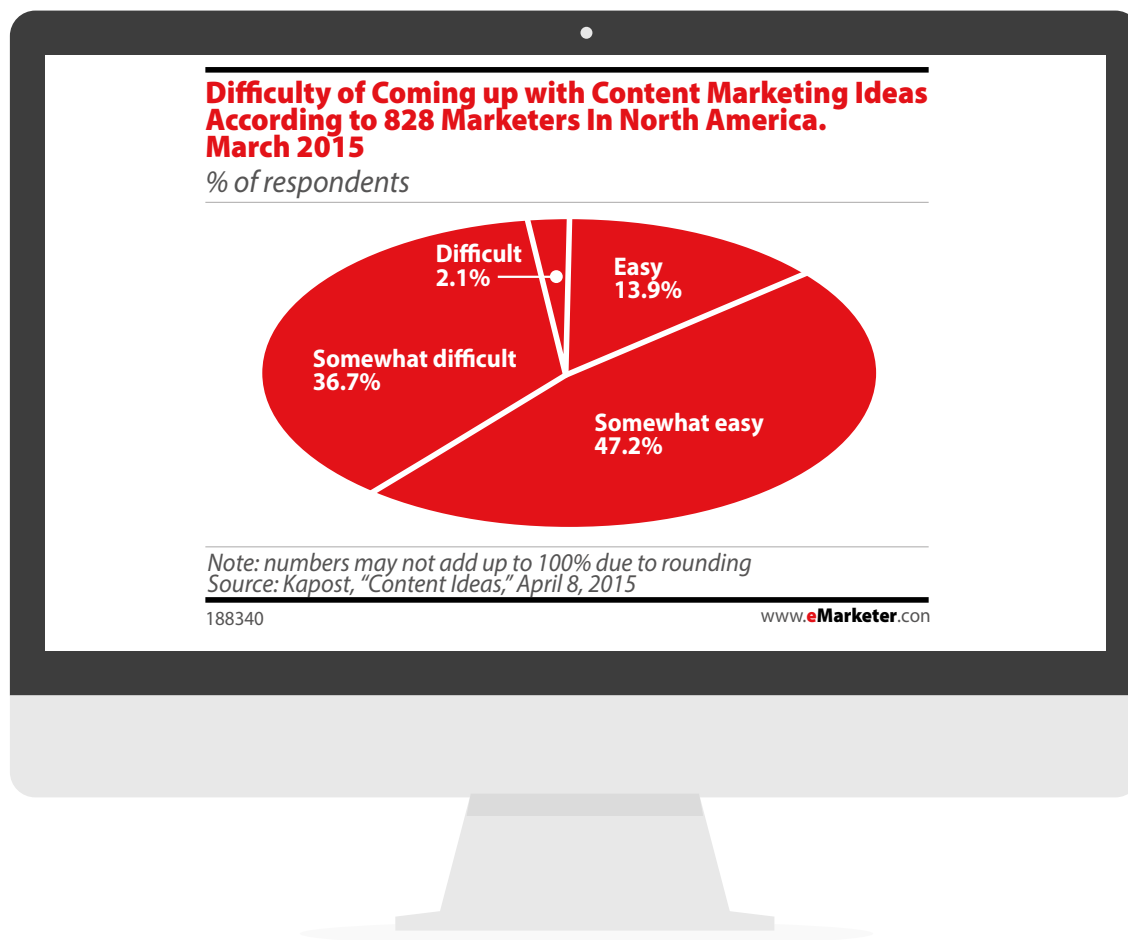

Image source: <https://www.sensiblemarketing.com/blog/44-b2b-content-marketing-ideas>

Creating and developing your content asset library is key in nurturing your brand's relationship with its audience. Yet finding content ideas can be a daunting task for many B2B marketers. In fact, more than 38 percent of B2B marketers find coming up with content ideas difficult.

To help you out in your content efforts, here are our 10 best practices for finding stellar content ideas, to help you build up a solid asset library to impress, engage and educate your leads and customers.

#1. Start with Your Company's Existing Content Assets

Your first stop in finding valuable content ideas for your B2B asset library is, in fact, your B2B asset library. Explore what you have already created and reuse it, as this can save you time and resources and cure the writer's block that often comes in the process of content creation.

You might be surprised how many useful insights you can draw from existing assets. Case studies, reports, presentations, event briefs, project reports, and statistics are all great starting resources for content that you can share with your audience. Digging in your company's archive is a great way to showcase your industry expertise too. If you have compiled data from research or your own operations, this is especially useful for your readers. Data-driven content is in high demand.

Once you've identified assets that can be published online, you can either repurpose them into content marketing formats such as blog posts and whitepapers or find inspiration for creating new articles, infographics and eBooks. Testimonials that illustrate the process your current customers went through when selecting your products or services are also useful to future prospects.

#2. Get Ideas from Your Current Team’s Knowhow and Projects

Besides existing content assets created as a part of projects, you can get ideas and insight for in-depth content from all the members of your company. This expertise can be used to inspire all kinds of information-rich content.

There are numerous ways to glean inspiration from your team. For example, you can make monthly rounds on what everybody’s working on, allowing you to get ideas from their work and identify the most successful projects. You can then turn this information into various content assets such as do/don’t blog posts, eBooks, how-to articles, infographics, and even videos.

A valuable source of content inspiration is your customer service team. They have a myriad of stories about customer experience with your products or services. These stories can be directly adapted into engaging narratives for blog posts, solution guides, opportunity guides, product comparisons, strategy templates, and implementation plans.

Create content that aligns with what your customer wants to know.
If your customer is asking:	What’s my problem	How do I fix my problem	Are you right for me
They want:	Education &amp; Thought Leadership	Solutions &amp; Product Suitability	Decision Support &amp; Credentials
What to offer:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Trends, benchmarks &amp; statistics</li> <li>• What’s new &amp; why it matters</li> <li>• Best-In-class examples</li> <li>• Problem guides</li> <li>• Opportunity guides</li> <li>• Needs assessments</li> <li>• 101 Education</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Solution guides</li> <li>• Solution comparisons</li> <li>• Pitfall analysis</li> <li>• Readiness &amp; suitability assessments</li> <li>• Strategy &amp; planning templates</li> <li>• How to find &amp; select the right vendor</li> <li>• How to build the budget</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Pricing</li> <li>• Trial demonstration</li> <li>• Access to subject matter experts</li> <li>• Implementation plans &amp; requirements</li> <li>• Delivery examples</li> <li>• Vendor comparisons</li> <li>• Data sheets</li> </ul>

Brainrider
Knowledge Marketing Group

Image source: <http://www.brainrider.com/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/Brainrider-Content-Cheatsheet-2013-thumbnail.png>

#3. Showcase Your Company's Talents and Insights in Content Series

After digging into your existing content assets and picking the brains of your team, there's one last method for extracting amazing content from your company. It involves getting close with your team members and understanding their top talents and expertise, plus persuading them to take part in your company's content. People's personal insights are especially useful for creating content series.

There are abundant opportunities for a series of content assets. You can make consecutive video episodes that revolve around the daily life in your company or follow one or a number of team members going about their daily routines. An alternative approach is to create an interview or conversation series in which people share pieces of their knowledge in a certain area. The key here is to get creative and build trust with your team members in order to produce authentic content.

Other types of content series include webinars and podcasts, which are becoming increasingly popular, or a series of blog posts that build up significant knowhow in a certain field of expertise. To inspire your team members to participate, it's important to focus on building their personal brands through these content pieces. The series comes from your company's knowledge, but people will be better stimulated to participate if they see the personal reward of showcasing their talents and knowhow.

#4. Interview Industry Leaders for Your Blog

Once you've exhausted different content ideas coming from within your company, it's time to look for external industry expertise that you can share with your audience. The first step is to identify prominent industry leaders and influencers in your field. This involves thorough research of your niche online.

Seasoned experts and active online bloggers are a great source of information that can be of high value for your customers. Their own audiences, additionally, can offer a fresh influx of potential leads for your own business. There are different content ideas that can spur from relationships with specialists, including guest blogging opportunities and content partnerships. As with your own team, it's important to find the right stimulus for experts to participate in your content.

One of the best ways to get great content for your asset library is by conducting interviews with experts and influencers. This format is an excellent way to showcase their knowledge, which is beneficial for them, but on your own platform, which means traffic for your website. Interviews can be shared on your blog or presented as recorded videos or live events. Alternatively, you can invite specialists to participate in your Twitter chats to create higher engagement with your online audience.

#5. Get Ideas and Content from Your Current Customers

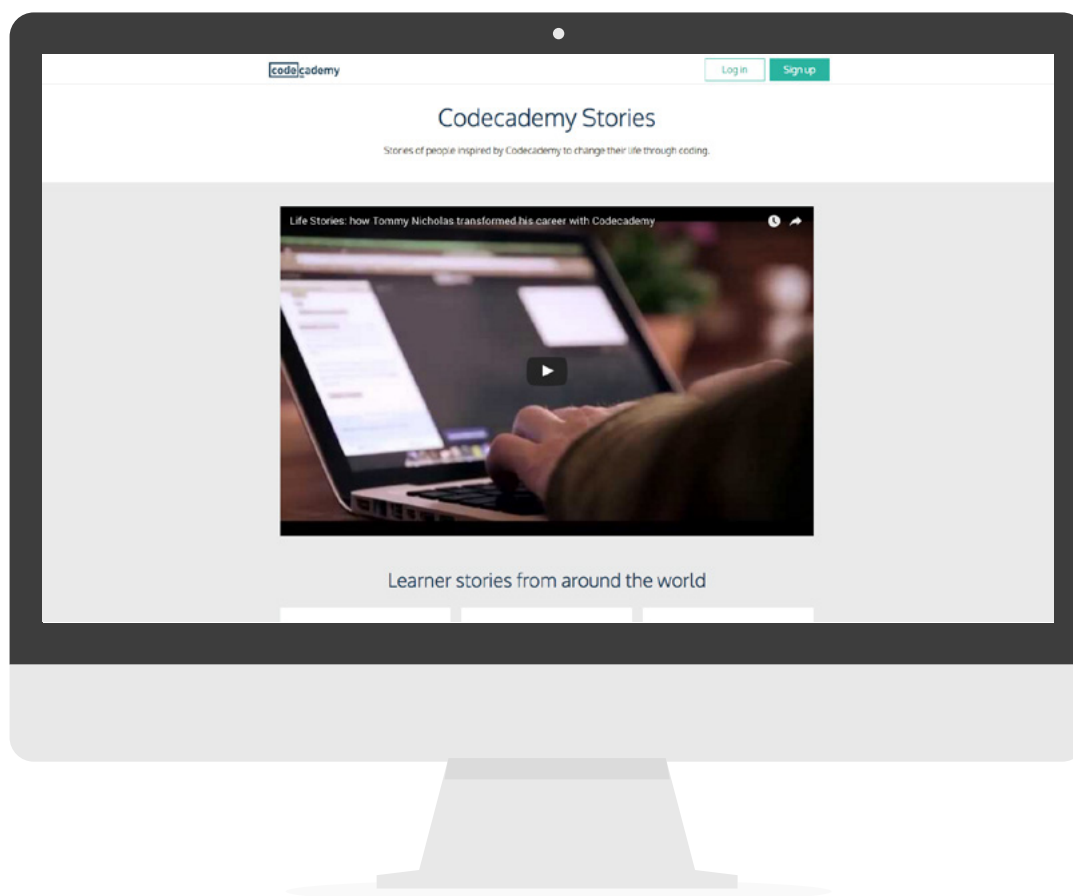

Image source: <https://www.sensiblemarketing.com/blog/44-b2b-content-marketing-ideas>

Your existing customers are another great source of content ideas for your asset library. You can illustrate their experiences with your products, or just pick their brains on important industry topics once you have developed a good relationship with them. To get to this point, it's worth investing in continuous communication with them, even beyond the point of the actual sale.

As mentioned earlier, testimonials are one of the most successful content formats. Your prospects are likely to find such assets useful, as they demonstrate the trajectory that your first-time buyers have gone through. Testimonials are also highly informative in terms of your products or services' benefits. But instead of a theoretical presentation of what your customers gain by connecting with your brand, they offer an overview of the practical application and the positives coming from working with your company.

Other types of content that can be inspired and created through relationships with current customers include interviews, use cases, surveys, and polls. You can ask your existing community questions of importance to your audience, and then share this first-hand information online. It's also important to make it easy for your current customers to share their knowhow, experience and tips on your blog platform or social media channels.

#6. Learn from Your Competitors

A truly effective way to find great content ideas for your own asset library is by studying your competitors. Their online channels can be a solid source of inspiration for content topics. As they are targeting similar audiences, you can inspire your own content efforts from their research findings on topics and content forms.

The first step is to identify the top performing competitors in your field, or the companies that are employing content marketing in the most interesting and innovative ways. Then you need to carefully study their online presence. This entails reviewing their websites, social media profiles, the language used and, of course, the topics they cover in their blog and social media content.

The purpose of this exercise is not to directly copy their approach, but instead to inspire your own content creation with fresh ideas. There are always different angles to the same story, plus your company has its unique experience and interpretation of knowledge. Your competitors' content can also be a good source for industry news and important trends in your field.

#7. Scout Industry Websites and Forums for Trending Topics

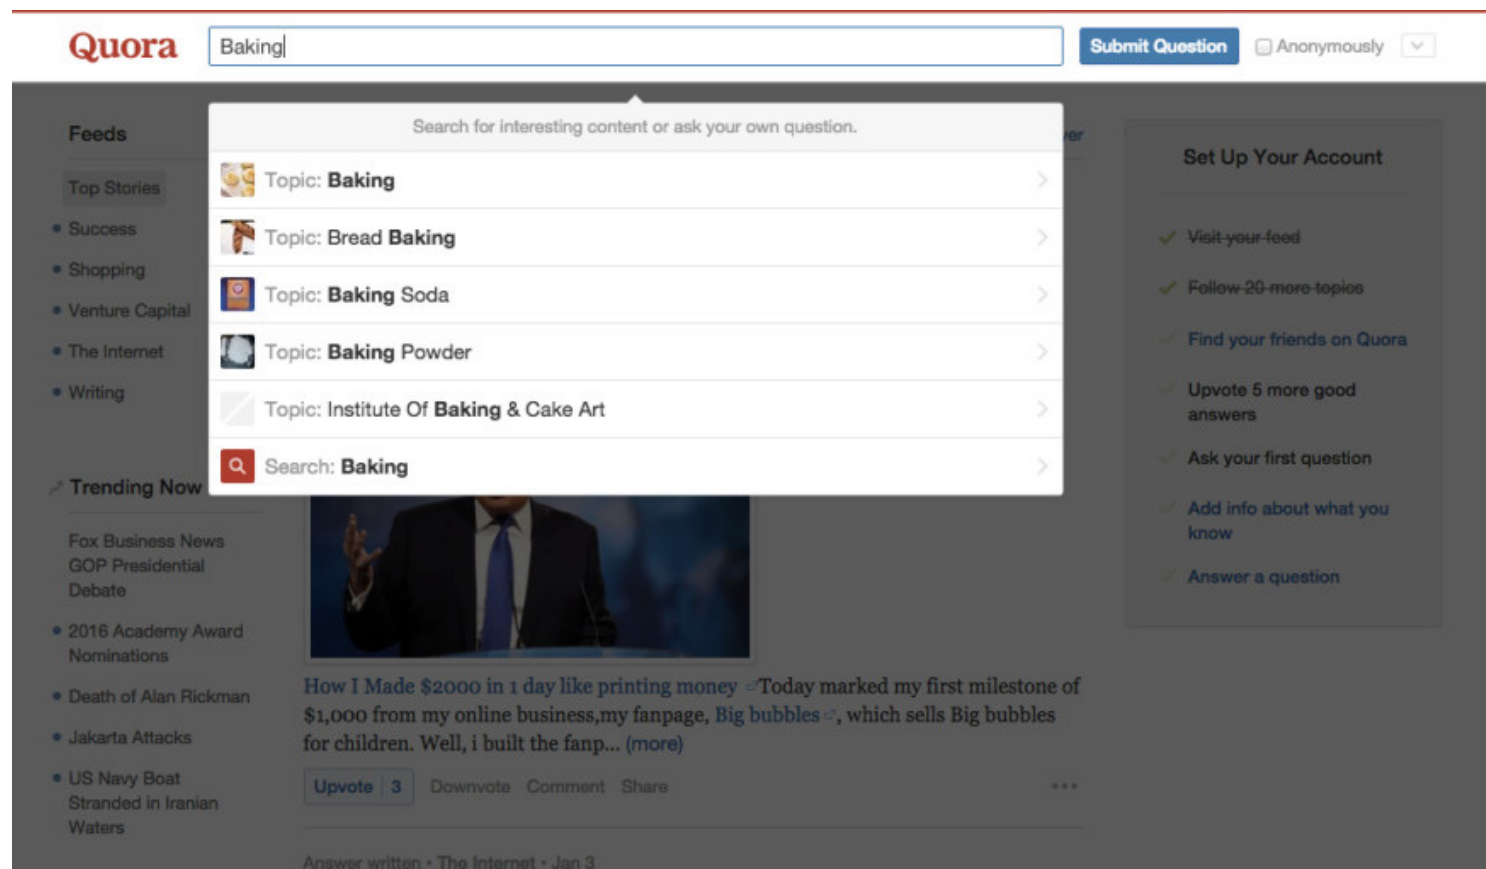

Image source: <http://buildfire.com/ways-source-content-ideas/>

Another way to stay on top of recent developments in your industry is to make a habit of using relevant forums and community platforms such as Quora and Reddit. It's also important to follow topical social media feeds, news outlets, industry magazines, and newsletters. All these resources are available online; it's just a matter of tapping into them and for content creation inspiration.

You can simply follow existing conversations or start new discussions whenever possible, so that you can spur meaningful exchanges that will inform your content efforts. Or, you can identify key influencers and participants on these platforms and observe the topics they focus on. Additional niche platforms you can explore include Facebook groups and Slack chats relevant to your industry.

Another way to keep track of news and trends in your field is to use social media listening. In practical terms, this just means following relevant people, like influencers and prospects, on social media and noting the topics they are discussing and the questions they are pondering. These sources can give you a completely fresh take on topics for your content library.

#8. Create a Content Partnership

Image source: http://paidpost.nytimes.com/ge/how-nature-is-inspiring-our-industrial-future.html?\_r=2

Another way to come up with content ideas is to consider the possibility of establishing partnerships for common creation and distribution of content. Your existing partners might be open to such opportunities, or you might look for matching and complementing partnerships with other companies.

By identifying a common goal, both teams can work on crafting a content partnership strategy. In this way, you can easily get inspiration from your partner's content efforts and apply it in your new endeavor. It's especially useful if the other company possesses assets or skills that fill in gaps in your team's skills, like video production or graphic design. Or, they might have compiled or researched valuable data that can be revealed in the content assets you create together.

Once you've identified your team's strengths, you can work on creating common campaigns. Besides getting ideas for content, such partnerships are very useful in terms of content distribution. The channels and audience reach are doubled, since both companies have existing distribution methods. To inspire your own partnerships, you can refer to some of the best examples of common content creation.

#9. Make Sequels to Your Best Performing Content

There's one more clever way to come up with great content ideas for your asset library, which doesn't involve much research and brainstorming. Whether it's a blog post, a guide, a video or an infographic, if you see that it works with your audiences, create a sequel to it. This is a tried-and-true method that many content marketers are applying today to grow their content base and to benefit from top-performing content.

To determine which content merits sequels, it's important to carefully analyze the old content that proved successful. Naturally, this entails digging into Google Analytics and checking what brings organic traffic to your website. Then, it's useful to focus on understanding the language, visuals and timing that work best, so that you can emulate these in the following content that you create.

Besides making sequels, you can also repurpose old content, as mentioned earlier. In this way, you can create bigger content assets such as whitepapers and eBooks, or recycle longer pieces to brief content for your blog or social media.

#10. Go Beyond the Limits of B2B Marketing

PORTENT

Tweet 239 810 1.1K Like

G+ in Share

PORTENT'S
Content
Idea Generator

If your keyword is Prince Charles, chances are no.

Andy Warhol said everyone gets their 15 seconds (of fame anyway).

Will B2B Marketing Ever Rule the World? Tweet This

Is your headline 60 characters or fewer?

Enter your subject here: B2B marketing

Before standard measurements, the length of a "foot" changed with each new king.

Did the Content Idea Generator fail English? That's impossible!
See below for tips on how to make it work better.

Image source: <https://www.portent.com/tools/title-maker>

When you've exhausted all the different methods for creating content, it's time to explore methods beyond the typical B2B marketing approaches. Who said that creativity doesn't have a place in B2B? You can employ your imagination to break the common patterns of content creation, and this might even turn into your best content.

If you are completely out of ideas, using a content idea generator can be a smart way to spark your creativity. Another way to go about it is to research what's trending in B2C content and check what has been adapted in B2B already. If you identify approaches that haven't been applied yet, you can try them out and pioneer them in your field.

Content marketing is here to stay, so it's important for B2B marketers today to get a hold of their content efforts. Coming up with content ideas for your B2B asset library can be tough, especially after months of creating content consistently. However, if you're ever stuck when brainstorming content ideas, these 10 best practices can be give a welcome shake up to your content production.

Alexander Kesler Bio:

Alexander is a visionary B2B digital marketer with over 15 years of experience. Focusing on solutions for B2B demand generation, digital marketing, ABM, Intent and AI driven lead generation, among others, Alexander embraces innovation and turns concepts and methodologies into products and marketing programs that drive ROI.

As Founder and President of INFUSEmedia, a data-driven B2B Demand Generation Network, Alexander leads a global team that executes campaigns across all industries and company sizes. He leverages his market knowledge and industry expertise to help his team deploy a suite of innovative programs and campaigns that deliver revenue growth for over 400 clients of INFUSEmedia.

Let's get in touch!

Office: +1 (617) 459-4500

Email: kesler@INFUSEmedia.com

Created by INFUSEmedia

© INFUSE media, All Rights Reserved